THE "RULE OF DOUBLING"

Showed Slight Breakdown in 1918's Production; Coke Supply and Quality and Labor Conditions Held to Have Prevented Exceptional Record.

The American Meral Market estimates the production of pig iron in 1918 at 35,900,000 tons, which was far below the capacity, given normal op-erating conditions, for it will be seen that in 1916, the record year, 600,000 toos more from was made, and yet there have been new furnaces completed with such capacity that if the old furnaces could again do what they did in 1916 all the furnaces would have been able to make 43,000,000 tons

The present capacity of the blast furnaces, on a fair commercial basis, is about 45,000,000 tons a year. Left today to take up her duties tual productive performance in 1916 enga. and adding a conservative allowance T. for the new furnaces. It cannot be enza. argued that the 45.000.00-ton estimate is excessive because production in 1917 and 1918 fell below that of 1916, as and 1918 fell below that of 1916, as A REMARKABLE shown above. The year 1916 was not a year of exceptionally good performance. It was, in fact, a tride below what might be expected. The case was rather that operating conditions in 1917 and 1918 were exceptionally poor. There was a shortage of serap of suk-able quality for use in blast furnaces. but the statistics show that in 1916 the furnaces did not consume an unusual proportion of such sorap.

Labor conditions were poor in the last two years, but they were not exceptionally good in 1916. The men did not work harder in that year than they do in normal years. As to coke, the supply was insufficient and the quality poor in 1917 and 1918, but there was some shortage of coke in 1916 and the quality on an average was not alto-gether as good as is expected for the future, with more than half the coke to be made by the by-product process from carefully selected descriptions of
